

Toolkit 3

Bioeconomy Kit for Students and Trainees

Contemplating a career in the bioeconomy? We've collected a few resources to spark your interest.

What resources are available for students and trainees interested in the bioeconomy?

Did you know?

There are many exciting and newly emerging jobs in the bioeconomy sector!

Many are unaware of the job opportunities offered in bioeconomy sectors. The bioeconomy is one of the most important economic drivers in Europe, with many newly emerging jobs created every year.

- 📄 This Allthings.Bio factsheet explains why a professional career in the Bioeconomy might be for you.
- ▶ Are you not yet convinced about pursuing a career in bioeconomy? This UrBIOfuture video might give you a few good reasons to do so.

Did you know?

There are several educational programmes in the bioeconomy!

- 🔗 You might find UrBioFuture's extensive search tool for educational programmes related to the biobased industry helpful.
- 🔗 ABBEE is helping prepare students for their future in a bio-based economy. Four blended and interconnected learning modules have been created by the project.
- 🔗 In the BioEcoN project universities from Vietnam and Europe collaborate to develop innovative learning materials for a new, innovative Master programme on sustainable bioeconomy.
- 🔗 The European Bioeconomy University (EBU) is an alliance of the six leading European universities in this field.
- 🔗 The EBU offers a common qualification supplement granted to master students of bioeconomy-relevant study programs and certification as European bioeconomy competent professionals.
- 🔗 The FIELDS project is helping to identify skills needs and skill gaps in the bioeconomy sector and has collected a wealth of resources in its online database.
- 🔗 Food-related professions make up one of the key job markets in the bioeconomy. Learn more about the most common career pathways in the food and food-related sectors in this ASKFOOD interactive training gap identifier.

Who we are – the consortium

